摘要

This paper presents a bibliometric dimension of the studies of local governments in Taiwan during the period of 1991 to 2009 since the Local Government Act has been implemented. The authors collected selected bibliography from books and monographs, journals, reports from governmental contracted project, and dissertation/thesis. There are 1936 entries. If we categorize by types of the literature, there are 88 books, 744 articles, 692 governmental contracted research reports, and 412 dissertations/theses.

The results of this study showed that different bibliometric ranks were found on different levels of subject categories. In addition, there were variations on the research issues on bibliometric according to the source of the literature. Our study on local government research literature enhances our views on the significance and image to the development of the local government disciplines.
